JAPAN

And Things Japanese

Japan and Things Japanese, a section devoted to present-day news and views, and ancient facts, regarding the Japanese people and their country, is a regular feature of the English Section.

WHY PERRY CAME TO JAPAN

By SOHO TOKUTOMI

Critical Stage Reached. It was impossible to pass that critical stage without either opening the country or warding off the foreign threats. The country, therefore had to decide between an open door policy and an exclusion policy and between a friendly foreign policy and a hostile one.

The leaders of the Mito clan (one of the close relatives of the Tokugawa family) headed by Lord Naiki Tokugawa were at first anti-foreign. Even after they had come to realize the impossibility of executing such a policy they continued to profess it openly. Their standpoint was extremely illogical, for they knew perfectly well that they could not carry out an anti-foreign policy. They were, therefore, contented with making severe criticisms of the policies of the feudal government. But their action had the effect of envenoming the patriotic sentiments of the masses.

The nobles around the Imperial Family in Kyoto were not well prepared for a national emergency. They knew almost nothing about the international situation of that period. Neither did they make any effort to know it. It was only too natural that the Imperial Court at the ancient capital should have become the headquarters of the leaders of the anti-foreign movements.

Best Tactics for Edo.

The best way to do away with the anti-foreign sentiments of the Kyoto group for the Edo government was to hand over the administration to the Imperial family and itself assume the role of a Department of Foreign Affairs. No such idea, however, was entertained either by the Edo officials or the noblemen in Kyoto. Had the Imperial Court occupied the position of a critic, the feudal government could have carried its foreign policy and at the same time cleared the suspicions of Kyoto. But the Edo government was dragged on by events and signed a treaty without the consent of the Imperial Court, the result being suspicion on the parts of both the courts and foreign powers. It was inevitable that the Edo government should have come to a deadlock from which it could not emerge without its own dissolution.

WON'T LOOK FOR MAN OF PRINCIPLE WHEN SHE WEDS, SAYS GIRL

Young People Apt To Change Views In Later Life

(This is the second of a series of articles on problems important to the second generation. Readers of this paper are invited to express their views on these questions in these columns.—The Editors.)

"First I must apologize to Mr. Koike for my contradictory statements," Miss Ikuyo Osawa, U. C. graduate and one of the city's most popular second generation girls, said in fluent Japanese last night in an interview with The Japanese American News, in commenting on an article on the marriage problem which appeared in this paper Saturday.

"Because," she continued, "Mr. Koike can talk from his experience, while my views are only theoretical in a way. What I may think to be correct today, I may condemn tomorrow. So I cannot say that anything I say now will always be my attitude towards this question."

"On the other hand, I think it is a good thing to have one's opinion, because that means that the person has reasoning power."

Have No Principle.

"About the principle for which Mr. Koike says people should marry. Most persons do not give much thought to this matter. Most men under thirty and women under 25 have not formed fixed principles. It only comes to them after they get married."

"Of course there is a certain kind of principle—for instance a boy around fifteen reading King Arthur will naturally be chivalrous. But that will not stay in him throughout his life. And I would not look for a man of principle when I get married."

In regard to education Miss Osawa was very emphatic. She maintained that, "Education is one of the first requirements."

"No longer can an educated man be satisfied with a 'virtuous house-keeper,' weak, trembling, and dependent, and who is a living embodiment of the Italian proverb, 'so good that she is good for nothing.' And the same applies to women."

"A girl can easily overlook the man's rather free association and staying out late at nights, if he is an artist or a genius."

"And smoking, too, is perfectly all right for a man. No girl will object to that, I believe. Of course I would not like a man who touches liquor."

"A man should be strong and a woman gentle. Such is the law of nature and it is understood."

Then she discussed "caveman" tactics and companionate marriage. She did not think that the latter

GETS 13 K. O.'S IN 16 FIGHTS

Kaneo Nakamura Puts Up Good Record

Thirteen knockouts in 16 fights. Did you know that a little fellow you have seen box time and time again boasted of such a remarkable record?

Well, "Moose" Tausig called our attention to the record today. It is owned by Kaneo Nakamura, Japanese featherweight.

Nakamura is a southpaw and he not only has a wicked wallop, but he is fast, clever and game, and in due course of time he may rank with the topnotchers. Nakamura has just returned from Los Angeles, where he dealt the sleeping powder to Leo Wolf, Frankie Theim and Bob Barry. They all listened to the birdies in round two.

The almond-eyed youngster is a student at Kelo university. Moreover he was sent across the Pacific to study the boxing game. He is here for no other reason and he is boxing to pay his expenses. He has fought the 16 bouts in five months and he has yet to taste defeat.

The accompanist includes Miss Hisa Fujii and Miss Y. Morikawa.

Herbert Hoover Rose Rapidly To High Office

Christened Herbert Clark Hoover, the Republican Presidential nominee, since he has been in public life, has discarded the middle initial and signs his name "Herbert Hoover."

He was born at West Branch, Iowa, August 10, 1874, son of a blacksmith and a Quaker mother. He was an orphan before he was 7 years old.

He worked his way to a degree in mining engineering and geology at Stanford, getting his degree in 1894. As an engineer he saw the world, following his profession in Australia, China, India, Russia, Alaska and Mexico.

An apprenticeship in the relief efforts that were to make him famous was served in Peking during the Boxer rebellion of 1900 when he organized his first flood relief.

Led Belgian Relief.

In London, when the World War descended on thousands of Americans in Europe, scurrying about trying to find a way to get home, Hoover headed an American relief committee.

His success in getting the Americans out of the clutches of the war resulted in his draft for the task of feeding Belgium. He assisted in the organization of the commission for relief in Belgium and assumed its leadership.

When the United States entered the war, President Wilson appointed Hoover food administrator for the United States; although he remained in charge of the Belgian commission.

In 1920 he was spoken of as Presidential possibility of both the Republican and Democratic parties. He wrote a letter declaring himself a Republican.

Name Up Before.

At the Republican convention in Chicago he was placed in nomination of prolonged applause in the gallery, but few votes on the floor.

He was appointed Secretary of Commerce by President Harding and held the same cabinet post in the administration of President Coolidge.

His home is on the campus of Stanford University, Palo Alto, California, but he is home only at infrequent intervals.

He married Miss Lou Henry, a school mate in Stanford, in 1899. They have two sons, Allan and Herbert.

When he was nominated for president he became a candidate for office for the first time in his life.

N. Y. K. Line Gets Subsidy From Nippon

A subsidy of $3,325,000 to be paid at the rate of $665,000 a year has been granted the Nippon Yusen Kaisha Steamship Company by the Japanese Diet according to dispatches received here yesterday.

The subsidy is to apply to steamers of the company's fleet operating between Hongkong, the Philippines and San Francisco. The subsidy will be paid to the company covering a period of five years.

The Japanese government has renewed its contract with the N. Y. K. for its Seattle line and has authorized an extension of the service to Hongkong, the dispatches said. The line at the present time terminates at Shanghai, but under the new contract between the company and the government the contract is to become operative on January 1 of next year.

The subsidy makes it possible for the company to proceed immediately with the construction of three passenger motor liners of 10,000 gross tons register each, which are now on the designing tables in Japanese shipyards. Orders for the new vessels will be placed with Japanese shipyards in the near future and the new liners will be rushed to completion.

The N. Y. K. line is now building three modern and fast motor passenger liners for the Orient-to-San Francisco service of the company, and as soon as the vessels are placed in commission three of the liners now operating between this port and the Orient will be diverted to the Orient-Seattle run, replacing smaller carriers now in that service.

OUR JUNIOR SECTION

Emma Kimoto of Ceres, sends us this poem:

MR. SMITH'S TROUBLES

Mr. Smith got up early one morning. And washed his little Ford car. "Oh, let me drive it," said Mrs. Smith.

"Alright, but don't go too far." Away she drove it. At sixty miles per hour; Then suddenly she slammed On the brakes with all her power.

It was too late The car to the garage was sent. For the windshield was broken And the fenders were bent.

Mrs. Smith went to a telephone. For her husband she had to tell; She told, and he answered, "I guess it doesn't look very well."

Thomas Inuzuka says he will make a poster for the Junior Club. Thanks, Thomas. We hope we'll receive it pretty soon.

Hideo Omura sends us this riddle: Why is a cry-baby's mouth like a tavern door? Answer: Because it is always open.

Herbert Hoover Rose Rapidly To High Office

Christened Herbert Clark Hoover, the Republican Presidential nominee, since he has been in public life, has discarded the middle initial and signs his name "Herbert Hoover."

He was born at West Branch, Iowa, August 10, 1874, son of a blacksmith and a Quaker mother. He was an orphan before he was 7 years old.

He worked his way to a degree in mining engineering and geology at Stanford, getting his degree in 1894. As an engineer he saw the world, following his profession in Australia, China, India, Russia, Alaska and Mexico.

An apprenticeship in the relief efforts that were to make him famous was served in Peking during the Boxer rebellion of 1900 when he organized his first flood relief.

Led Belgian Relief.

In London, when the World War descended on thousands of Americans in Europe, scurrying about trying to find a way to get home, Hoover headed an American relief committee.

His success in getting the Americans out of the clutches of the war resulted in his draft for the task of feeding Belgium. He assisted in the organization of the commission for relief in Belgium and assumed its leadership.

When the United States entered the war, President Wilson appointed Hoover food administrator for the United States; although he remained in charge of the Belgian commission.

In 1920 he was spoken of as Presidential possibility of both the Republican and Democratic parties. He wrote a letter declaring himself a Republican.

Name Up Before.

At the Republican convention in Chicago he was placed in nomination of prolonged applause in the gallery, but few votes on the floor.

He was appointed Secretary of Commerce by President Harding and held the same cabinet post in the administration of President Coolidge.

His home is on the campus of Stanford University, Palo Alto, California, but he is home only at infrequent intervals.

He married Miss Lou Henry, a school mate in Stanford, in 1899. They have two sons, Allan and Herbert.

When he was nominated for president he became a candidate for office for the first time in his life.

THE ROMANCE OF JAPAN

Through the Ages

By JAMES A. B. SCHERER

An Interpretative Outline of the Story of Japan from the Introduction of Buddhism in 552 A. D. to the Passage of the Manhood Suffrage Act in 1925.

So much artistic skill was spent on the making of the sword and all its appurtenances, that Captain Brinkley, writing on Sword-Furniture, goes so far as to say of the three fields in which Japanese art may justly claim to show original genius, namely the art of genre painting with its correlated achievements in chromo-xylography, the field of netsuke-carving and the field of sculpture as employed for the decoration of weapons of war, the most remarkable work is probably found in the last.

The sword was the soul of the Samurai, and the departed glory of Bushido still flashes from its imperishable blade and smiles in the poetic delicacy of its furnishings.

It was Captain Brinkley himself, probably the most appreciative friend that Japan has ever had among Westerners, who performs the ungracious but perhaps necessary task of pointing out the shortcomings of Bushido as a basis of national character. He thinks that its most prominent defect was indifference to the rights of the individual.

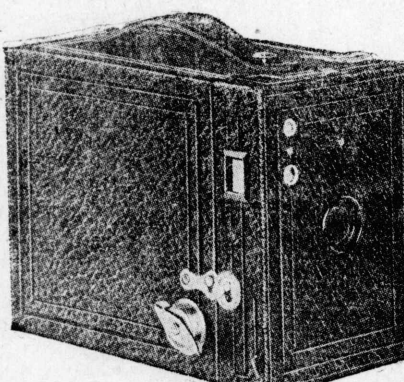

Bushido taught a vassal to sacrifice his own interest and his own life on the altar of loyalty, but it did not teach a ruler to recognize and respect the rights of the ruled. It taught a wife to efface herself for her husband's sake, but it did not teach the husband any corresponding obligation towards a wife.

A correlated fault was excessive reverence for rank and rigid exclusiveness of class. There was no ladder for the commoner—the farmer, the artisan and the merchant—to ascend into the circle of the samurai. It resulted that, in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, gifted men of the despised grades sought in the cloister an arena for the exercise of their talents, and thus, while the Bushi received no recruits, the commoners lost their better elements, and Buddhism became a stage for secular ambition. It cannot be doubted that by closing the door of rank in the face of merit, Bushido checked the development of the nation.

These are the cold words of scientific Western criticism, and they use the past tense. Bushido sprang warm from the loins of the mystical East, and it is not yet dead—its soul goes marching on. To subject it to criticism, whether just or unjust, is to criticize Yamato Damashi, the spirit of the Japanese nation itself, for out of that it was born. Some of its attributes have just been suggested, but its real substance was racial fidelity, the basis of ancestor worship. The bushi endured as being the invisible one, in the breath of their life he lived. Ghostly hands unheaped the sword of Yoshitsune; he fought for the souls of his dead, who also inspired him. To them with his sword, at last, he surrendered his own spirit and those of his wife and children.
