STRONGLY IN FAVOR OF INTER-RACIAL TIES, SAYS MAN; MANY LIVE HAPPILY

There Is Nothing Wrong With It Says Attorney

(This is the tenth of a series of articles on problems important to the second generation. Readers are invited to express their views on these problems in these columns.—The Editors.)

"Inter-racial marriage! There is nothing wrong with it," asserted Saburo Kido, prominent second generation attorney of San Francisco in an interview with The Japanese American News yesterday.

Then he went into the different phases of the law and explained the technical faults of the existing California statute concerning Japanese-American marriages, with authority and carefully chosen words.

Cannot Be Stopped.

"Inter-racial marriages cannot be stopped by law or mere discussions," he continued. "When people love each other, no one can stop them. To prevent it may cause tragedy and immorality. History seems to have proven that."

"I have many friends who are married to Americans, Hawaiians, and Chinese and they are as happy as any one of us. Personally I would not marry an American, because I have found my ideal a Japanese girl. I have not considered marrying an American, because I could not make enough to support one comfortably, and I could not keep up the association of her friends, and to deprive her of that would not be fair to her."

Better Opportunity.

"But there are men with different ideas, women willing to sacrifice everything for love, and children will have a much better chance financially and socially, if they are not full blooded Japanese. Such was not the case in the past. But times change. And if the people are really happy despite the changes in various circumstances to which they have been accustomed and if their children are more blessed than those of others, I do not see why any one should be against inter-racial marriages. In fact I am strongly in favor of them. Of course," he added emphatically, "we must inter-marry with a good race."

Speaking on the question of religion he said, "I hesitate to readily agree with Rev. Kowta who stated in The Japanese American News a week ago, that to be happy in married life, people must have the same religion if both of them are ardent. I doubt if it is not a little narrow conception of the question."

Mr. Kido believes that the extent of education and all the other requirements which have heretofore been declared by different men as

Business Is Discussed At E. L. Meeting

DINUBA, June 25.—(Special) Since the nomination of Henry Y. Furubayashi as president of the Dinuba M. E. Church Epworth League, the first business meeting was held on June 20, at the home of the League superintendent.

Important business matters were discussed. Upon the resignation of Tom Morishima as the Era agent, Takeshi Yamaguchi was chosen to take his place.

At the meeting, a social was enjoyed by all.

HIGH PRAISE GIVEN JAPAN BY SCHOLAR

Aver's Nippon Will Solve Population Problem

DINUBA, June 25.—(Special)

"The marvelous industrial strides Japan is making amazes me. With an almost inexhaustible supply of water power Japan is destined to be a great industrial nation. The rapidity with which Tokyo is being rebuilt over its ashes of the great earthquake, the vigor with which the Japanese people are modernizing her whole industrial system and the towering skyscrapers now rising in the large centers indicate that Japan will solve her surplus population by concentrated industrialization."

Thus spoke Prof. P. W. Nahli of the University of California, who returned here late last week aboard the N. Y. K. liner Taiyo Maru from a brief tour of Japan, undertaken in behalf of the university for the purpose of conducting a research on ancient Japanese art.

Possess Vigor.

"Japanese people as a race possess extraordinary vigor and adaptive qualities," Prof. Nahli went on to say. "Her occupation of Korea and Manchuria has proved a blessing to the natives due to Japanese genius in effective administration."

Speaking on the subject of Japanese politics, Professor Nahli declared that the people of Nippon showed restraint and intelligence in their first general manhood election held during his stay in that country.

"A stranger would have been surprised," he said, "at the comparatively conservative voting that marked the principal election. But those who know the general temper of the people are aware that the Japanese as a race are a conservative people. They are temperate in their judgment, a fact strikingly illustrated by the results of the election."

THE JAPANESE GOLD FISH

In his posthumous works entitled the Saikaku -Ok-Miyagi, Saikaku, a famous Japanese novelist, who died in the 6th year of Genroku (1693), left an excellent sketch of the gold-fish of Shinchuya. It reads in effect: "There is a famous dealer at Ikeno-hata near Kuro-mon-cho, named Ichizayemori Shinchuya who has seventy to eighty large wooden vessels full of clear water, peopled with pretty gold and silver fish, gracefully swimming about in the hairy green leaves of fine water plants floating on the water moving their three-forked tails in the loveliest manner imaginable. Some of them are about one foot long and have very beautiful scales that shine like pure gold. Those are sold for five to seven ryo of gold each. Surely no country people could pay such a large sum of money for their pets. They must be for the children of a Daimyo" whispers one of the lookers to his companion, when a rustic fellow enters the shop, goes to the head of the employees, delivers over to him a small dirty pot full of the larvae of mosquitoes and receives from him twenty-five mon for it; promises that he would bring another the next day, and goes out waving his head in the humblest manner to all the employees."

This sketch by Saikaku is very interesting, for it tells us that in those old days, there was a dealer in gold fish possessed of seventy to eighty large vessels of gold fish and that some people were earning their living gathering and selling larvae of mosquitoes and other kind of food for gold fish.

Subject of Paintings.

In the later ages than the Genroku Era, the story of the gold-fish are recorded in hundreds of booklets. Moreover, most of the famous artists of the Ukiyoe, or Japanese color prints, adopted gold fish as

HAWAII-BORN U.S.C. BOYS ARE 'DAMEDA'

Bad Reputation Faces Youths Coming From Isles

HONOLULU, June 25.—(By Mail)

"Hawaii-umarewa shinyo suru koto dekina. Karerawa dameda."

In other words, "Hawaiian-borns cannot be trusted. They are good for nothing."

Such are the uncomplimentary words which one hears almost universally in California bespeaking the unpopularity of local young people on the mainland, according to a Hilo boy who has spent the past eight years studying at the University of California and making observations in all parts of the state. He writes in the Nippu Jiji:

"We have to admit rather reluctantly that the conduct and character of some Hawaiian-borns are a disgrace, if not an actual menace to the well-being of the Japanese community. We must admit that some 'Kanakas' have fallen into the pits of disappointment, of darkness and of failure; but we cannot, and will never admit or tolerate the accusation that all Hawaiian-borns are good for nothing—in other words, failures."

"Captain Web" Gibson has been doing some shopping himself, in his spare time, he explained. "We were hardly here when men with things to sell appeared in my room. But we have been looking over the goods and comparing prices in the shops. The things certainly are pretty and I hope the Japanese women keep on wearing kimono."

Likes Kimono

Mrs. Crawford mentioned the embroidered Chinese suits so popular with American girls. Mr. Gibson looked slightly unconcerned for a moment then brightened, "The ones that come in little cases, with slippers to match?" he asked.

"The boys are enthusiastic over Jap," said Coach Crawford. "Many of them have never been away from home before and they are enjoying every minute of this trip."

Five years ago, when the coach made his first visit to Japan with the White Sox, interest in western athletics was just starting. Today, sports have "arrived," he said, judging by Monday's score.

"The umpire is boss here. No 'boozing' his decisions, like at home. And the Japanese certainly are good sports."

"Japan certainly makes you realize you are away from home for sure. As one member of the team remarked, 'Gosh, there's a lot of water between us and home!'"

CALIFORNIA DOLL GIVEN HIGH HONOR

State Gift Decorated By Princess of Japan

SACRAMENTO, June 25.—(UPI)

A tiny California doll, dressed in a beautiful wedding gown, has been given a decoration of honor by Shigeko Teru, 18-month-old Japanese princess.

The little doll wears the ornament called Shimaihata (emblem of married felicity), according to word received by Sam Cohn, deputy state superintendent of public instruction. California's doll was sent to Japan by school children, as one of the ambassadors of good will between the children of the two countries. In company with representative dolls of other states she made the trip to the Orient.

The little Japanese princess was delighted when she saw the doll wearing a wedding dress. The school children of Japan received the gifts on the day of the Doll festival, a holiday observed in the Orient.

Now the Japanese school children are to return the courtesy of the California children. A consignment of dolls is to be shipped to reach this country before Christmas.

They are to be more than 2 1/2 feet in height, with moveable head and limbs and will wear gorgeous Japanese Kimonos and costumes trimmed in gold.

Chizuko Eva Tanaka, thanks for your riddles. We've had them in some time ago so won't use them today. But thanks just the same. Write in again, won't you?"

Iiso Fukuba writes in to ask us whether he might get the camera we're giving away if he obtains a year's subscription.

We're very sorry, Iiso, but the manager of this paper says it will have to be two new subscriptions of $2 each or one new subscription of $4. That's the rule, you see, and unless it is changed, we'll have to stick to it. We hope, however, that you'll be able to obtain a new subscription from some of the people living in your neighborhood. Write in again, Iiso.

Martha Nishida of Montrose, Co- lorado, a new member writes:

"I am enjoying the boys' and girls' section very much. Every morning I stand and wait for the mail man to come and bring me the mail. I am glad to see so many new members every day."

Martha says she's trying to get one of our cameras. Good for you and Martha, and we hope you the best of luck. Also we've placed your name on the list of members voting for club colors. It was printed a few days ago.

The change in the Japanese character that took place at Kamakura is reflected in painting, less than in sculpture. Portrayal of action now attracts the artist's brush. For the first time he turns away from contemplation, or meditation, and becomes more aptly active and therefore secular.

Toba Sojo's well-known "Battle of the Bull" will serve as an illustration. Influenced by the stark simplicity of Zen, this 1333 A.D.) is now best remembered by an anthology, "The Songs of the Hundred Poets" (Hyakunin-isshu), widely used in a domestic card-game.

The glory of Kamakura was destined to be short-lived. Yoritomo's two sons followed him as Shoguns, but they were not strong enough to engineer the vast and intricate machine his brain had created.

So his wife's family, the Hōjō, seized the machinery of government and turned the Minamoto into mere "puppet shoguns," corresponding to the "puppet emperors" at Kyoto. But these Hōjō abused their power that the military capital of Kamakura, after only a century and a half of domination, was to fall forever in the year 1333.
