THESE CHILDREN OF OURS

By GEORGIA JEWETT HALE

AS soon as the child learns to read by himself, he is apt to show a sudden and avid interest in books. This is the time when many parents, while they rejoice that the wide fields of literature and learning are now commencing to open before his eyes, overlook the tremendous opportunity which is also opening to them, to direct the child's heroes as well as his literary education. One of the leaders of present-day education recently said, "You do not know your child unless you know his heroes."

VISITING THE WORLD CHILDREN

By Ruth Thompson

If there were some work to do in the small garden, father would look at the garden. He would smile, and his white teeth would flash, "Manana," he would say, "Manana." And that word means "tomorrow." That meant that father would do the work tomorrow—maybe!

The ROMANCE of JAPAN

Through the Ages By JAMES A. B. SCHERER

An Interpretative Outline of the Story of Japan from the Introduction of Buddhism in 552 A. D. to the Passage of the Manhood Suffrage Act in 1925.

Recognition of racial equality had become a prime object of Japan's foreign policy soon after she obtained the recognition of political equality in 1895. In her diplomatic dealings with the United States she pressed this new point so far—if Ambassador Hanihara's authority may be accepted—as to be unwilling to substitute a formal treaty for the "Gentlemen's Agreement," which placed the regulation of her emigrants in her own hands.

The post-war American immigration measure was so framed as to call for revision in 1924, and when that came California meanwhile had made such headway with a nation-wide "campaign of education" that uniformed censure of her attitude toward Oriental immigration gave way to a widespread sympathy. To illustrate, the press of the rest of the country used to address certain caustic questions to California, but to these questions the state now seems to have succeeded in giving reasonably satisfactory answers.

To this question California replied that the problem was peculiarly her own because almost all of the Japanese arriving in America arrived through her ports, and finding her climate and soil congenial, never crossed the state border. That, owing to this fact, 100,000 of the 150,000 Japanese in the continental United States were domiciled within her borders, or two-thirds of the total number; the state of Washington coming next with about one-sixth, and Oregon and Idaho ranking nearly together as the only other states where the numbers were noteworthy. That, even if further immigration should be entirely shut off, California would still have to reckon with a large annual increment of American-born Japanese, owing to the steady increase, within recent years, of immigrant Japanese women.
