SIX DEAD IN HOTEL FIRE AT SEATTLE

Two Tots of Mayeda,
Proprietor, Missing
In Disaster

SEATTLE, Oct. 18.—Fire breaking out in an old Japanese hotel in the "Skid Roads" district of Seattle early yesterday trapped a number of guests at the head of the stairway—the only exit—and before firemen could battle their way through the flames, six persons were dead and 15 injured.

Hospital attendants said some of the injured would probably die.

The hotel, the Portland, was an old, three story brick structure, conducted by a Japanese, and tenanted by loggers and laborers.

FIRE TRAPS GUESTS

The fire, believed to have been incendiary, broke out on the second floor and guests on that floor and the third were unable to reach the stairway, which was roaring like a draft furnace.

There they piled up—screaming, shouting, clawing, fighting, dying. In a heap of tangled arms and legs the firemen found the victims.

Others had jumped, some to safety, some to death. The Japanese wife of the proprietor, with a scream which could be heard above the din, leaped from the third floor and was critically injured.

MEN TRY ESCAPE

When the fire department arrived the flames were leering from the upper windows of the old structure, and men could be seen trying to reach the apertures, calling frantically for aid.

The entire downtown and waterfront forces of the fire department were thrown into action within a few minutes, and for all its human effort it took, the fire was over in a very short time.

Firemen were searching the hotel for the two small children of the proprietor, K. Mayeda, who were missing after the fire was out. The children were not included in the early death toll.

mark by running the 100 meters in 10.3 seconds.

In the pole vault Shuhel Nishida, a Waseda University athlete, hurled himself over the bar at the 4.10 meter (13 ft. 5 7-16 in.) mark, a new Japanese record.

Kazuo Kimura of Waseda broke the Japanese record in the high jump by achieving the 1. 94 meter (ft. 4 3-8) mark. In the 300 meter event Masaji Kitamoto of Keio University made it in 9 min. 8.8 seconds. This establishes a new Japanese record.

Five years ago Heiri de Man conducted an extensive and enlightening inquiry into the mind of the modern workman of the machine age in Germany, and the mass of replies that came from German will find these replies in full in a German volume under the title of "Der Kampf um die Arbeitsfreude."

The English edition of this book, under the title of "Joy in Work," omits most of this first-hand material.

A composito, listed as Case 67, speaks of his relation to the machines of the press room as follows:

"As we contemplate our machines, we have sensations varying in accordance with the nature of the machine...

NEED OF SKILL

"A typesetting machine, of one kind or another, with its delicate and complicated mechanism, assumes the aspect of an extraordinarily skilled man, not to say a magician, who by the adroitness of his manipulations, conjures something up out of the air.

"One tries to enter into personal relations with such a machine, to fulfill its wishes, to perform all the preliminaries correctly, and in this way to charm it into maximum production. One might almost be said to flatter and to caress it, for it has its moods. One rejoices in the pro-
