EASTERN racketeers and heavy grape shipments cause big drop in price" says a newspaper headline.—But what connection is there between New York gangsters and grapes?—Evidently gangs are operating to control the wine grape market in New York and its vicinity, and dealers have been forced to cut prices to avoid trouble.—Someone has just made the discovery that "The problem of fresh grapes is not only control in California, but more particularly control at the market."—Bright man! We hope that more discoveries like that will be made for other agricultural products and their distribution.—Whose fault is it if the farmer has to throw away his crops, say onions or potatoes, while the poor worker in the cities pays good and plenty for those same products?—Such conditions are an injustice to both the producer and the consumer.—We wonder if—Oh, well, we suppose it is good business to keep conditions that way for the sake of the few who profit thereby. At least, so we've been told.

THE Japanese press is getting more and more impatient with the new United States ambassador to Japan, William Cameron Forbes, for his hedging on the question of immigration.—Poor Mr. Forbes! Being a gentleman, and a polite one at that, it must be very embarrassing for him.—How in the world could Mr. Forbes know when the American public which he represents does not know? We are glad that prospects for our ever becoming an ambassador are extremely dim and distant, to put it mildly.

"Kid the First, New York," a lost dog, is the pet ward of Russian Hill. "He isn't exactly handsome but he has personality," says a reporter. "And there is a wistful look in his eyes that makes people open up their hearts and panties."—We have often wondered about that. There are some people who are so beautiful that they instantly give us mental visions of a wax dummy in a show window. And there are others who are downright homely and yet we like to see them and it gives us a comfortable feeling to be near them.—Why we wonder? Is it "personality"? Is it the "wistful look" in their eyes?—Perhaps.

A man in Los Angeles kills a young mother for the sum of $2.20.—A life for $2.20! We wonder if the value of human life is not depreciating all the while the cost of clothing, food, and other things in life are increasing.

Finance Head May Be Forced to Quit in Budget Clash

(Special to The Japanese American News) TOKYO, Nov. 7.—Today there are rumors to the effect that the present Finance Minister Junnosuke Inouye may be asked to resign and that Reijiro Wakatsuki will be asked to take over the charge of Japan's finances.

This situation results from Inouye's steadfast refusal to budge from his policy of strict retrenchment. Other departments, on the other hand, maintain that they cannot cut down their budgets on so radical a scale as set down by the Finance Minister. This has led to a deadlock between the finance department and the other departments of the government.

Today the Cabinet had a special meeting concerning the budget but was unable to accomplish anything on account of the deadlock. The matter was postponed November 10.

W. C. FORBES IS SILENT ON IMMIGRATION

Japan Press Getting Urgent for Statement by Envoy

(Special to The Japanese American News) TOKYO, Nov. 7.—(UP)—Americans could copy the Japanese appreciation of art and beauty to good advantage, W. Cameron Forbes, new ambassador to Japan, told the American association of Tokyo in a speech here today.

"I am relieved by the absence of billboards 30 by 8 feet along the highway telling me what toothpaste I should use," Forbes declared.

The ambassador refrained from commenting on Japanese agitation for revision of the Oriental exclusion clause from the United States immigration law—a question which has been brought to the front with increasing force in the press in recent months.

Newspapers have repeatedly demanded that Forbes make some statement of the position of the United States.

THE SMALL TOWN TWILIGHT

By GLENN FRANK

As America tries to work out its rural-urban problem, one of the most stubborn facts it faces is that there are too many small towns.

One of the major planks in any well-conceived long-time rural life program must be an intelligently engineered realignment between town and country.

As I see it, there can be but two valid excuses for the existence of a town, viz:

First, it must offer a more favorable environment for the human spirit than the country affords. Second, it must be an efficient service agency for the country surrounding it.

A town need not, in order to justify its existence, do both of these things, but it must do one or the other of them.

I do not want today to enter into the question of the relative values of town and country as homes for the human spirit, but to raise one question regarding the innumerable small towns of America as service centers for the country surrounding them.

It is obvious, I think, that with the development of quick transportation by cheap automobiles multiplied thousands of sloven, inefficient, small towns lost their justification for being.

America could get along better with fewer small towns.

Rural Americans would fare better by riding a bit further for better service in better towns.

The line between town and country, as the carriers of distinctive cultures, would be clearer, if we had fewer small towns and more regional centers that had achieved a genuine urban character and urban efficiency.

If some social architect had the virgin American continent before him, with all of the modern means of transportation and the modern agencies of service at his command, he would not, I am sure, spot the map with the innumerable small towns that have grown up by a chance, but would place towns strategically to serve a radius of territory as wide as could be conveniently reached by the country man with his modern motor.

I shall speak of this town-country realignment in greater detail at another time.
