COMMENTS

By K. K.

ONE DAY not so long ago, the editor caught us sneaking several copies of the newspaper out of the office. "Ah, ha!" was the devastating comment, "I suppose you're going to take them to your friends so that you can say to them 'Just look at the paper that I—ahem—wrote!' Well, what of it! Haven't we writers got the right to be proud of our work? If it weren't for a little justifiable vanity, would there be any newspaper writers?"

For aside from the satisfaction of their vanity in seeing themselves in print, what compensation do newspaper men get? Surely not money. For every well-paid New York feature writer, there are hundreds of the rank and file in the newspaper game eking out a bare existence on starvation wages. The work isn't particularly attractive. Rush, rush, rush, driving yourself to pounce out words, words, words, in a never-ending race with time, amid scenes of everlasting bustle and confusion! And there's no glory in it. For the most part, newspaper stories are unsigned, and the readers never know who wrote them. And even if the writers were known, nothing ever comes their way except complaints. Someone is displeased because something was written about him; someone is displeased because something was not written about him; someone is displeased because something was written about somebody else; someone is displeased because something was not written about somebody else. If the writer expresses an opinion, he's prejudiced; if he doesn't express an opinion, he's colorless.

Yet, what is there about the newspaper game that makes men stick to it when everything within the realm of sense and reason says that they should be doing something else? Part of the explanation lies in the pride of creation. Call it vanity if you will. Every writer is as proud of his brain-children as a father is of his off-springs of his own flesh and blood. There is a thrill in telling a story which no one else has ever heard before, and in telling it in a way no one else has ever done. So if a writer seems to be self-centered, if he seems to like to talk about himself and his work, if he likes to show his writings around, be tolerant. That's the only compensation he gets—to gloat over his brain children.

WE WERE talking with an editor of another paper the other day. All about our trials and tribulations, how we had to work all day Christmas, and on Sundays—for the newspaper knows no vacation. Said that editor finally, "We must be crazy to love a profession like yours. But we've got to be crazy, or else there wouldn't be any newspapers. After all, it's grand just the same, isn't it? Guess it's a fever, this newspaper 'bug'!" Mixed metaphor, but you get the idea.

My pet gripe: People who rattle their programs, and whisper during symphony concert.

Pestiferous women who coo you into making up the fourth hand at a bridge game.

People who demand your name over the telephone without telling you theirs.

Being handed that usual blah about "Plenty of good seats upstairs; no waiting in line for balcony seats."

After tea with a roomful of haughty dowagers who try—in their own little way, and Gawd, what a way!—to be so nice to you.

People who gurgles, "You must come over to see us sometime," and never give you their address or name the date.

Allowance check not coming on time.

After having written a whole of an article, to see it come out in print with the most important part lopped off by the editor. Editors will do it every time—slash out the choicest tidbits right in the middle of a climax where it is most necessary to preserve the continuity of thought. And then they'll leave in some lame passage which might just as well have never been written. I'm in a savage mood today. Gr-r-r. I could go on like this forever.

SHIPS CRASH OFF TOKYO

Two OSK Vessels in Collision Escape Sinking

TOKYO, Feb. 2.—Seventeen passengers were successfully taken aboard the steamer Takao Maru after she collided in a fog with the steamer Arabia Maru off the mouth of Tokyo bay shortly after noon yesterday.

The Arabia Maru for a time seemed in danger of sinking, but she steamed full speed to shallow water. Her crew of about 88 remained aboard.

A survey showed the Arabia Maru received a hole in her side above the water line and one hatch was leaking. The vessel was in no danger, however, officials of the Osaka Shosen Kaisha, owners of both vessels, said.

The Arabia Maru was inbound from Vancouver, B. C., and the Takao Maru outbound from Yokohama.

CLUB'S NEW MEMBERS At a recent meeting of the HI-Y club the following new members were initiated into the organization: Niho Kubokawa, Dick Kadoshima, Harry Okazaki, and Daisuke Okazaki.

The following members will take charge of the activities of the club during this year as head of their committees: Fred Nakano, religious; K. Susaki, educational; H. Tanaka, physical; Kitagawa, social; and K. Kayano, debating.

Following is Mr. Mimura's letter.

"The Fifty-Fifty club was organized about three months ago by a few of us for the purpose of getting together once a month to share each others' knowledge of every department of the motion picture industry.

"We have Edie Imazu, art director at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios; Tetsu Komai, the actor; K. Y. Ohara of the Fox setting department; K. Takamura, still department of the R.K.O. studio; Kazuo Takimura of the Nikkatsu studio, etc.

"These people are all active workers in Hollywood studios. Each month we invite studio technicians to have a little talk. Directors, art directors, cameramen, set designers, sound experts, and many others are some of those who come to talk to us. This is a club for everybody who is interested in the motion picture art."

Signed:—Harry A. Mimura.

JUNIOR AND SENIOR SECTION

is always full of thoughts of mother. In this poem I will try to portray just how I feel towards mother.

"MA" "Life is but an empty dream" So I heard for more than once. But 'twas not so dear dear ma Who toiled and crawled her long Life thru; Life was happy—life was gay—It was gloomy, it was bad—All through these she worked and toiled.

Yes, my ma she never winced Even when she faced the worst; She's the greatest ma on earth.

Once when I—a little tot, Fell and hurt my little paws, She took me up and kissed my hand And lo! my paws were very well. Her hand is rough with many work. Her face is wrinkled to be sure. And her eyes are now too weak. But her heart is made of gold. That's why she keeps a toiling on. There may be millions of Ma's on earth.

Junior— They may be good or may be bad, But out of these I pick my Ma. The dearest, kindest Ma of all. Thank you, Explorer. That was very nice. Didn't you think so, members? Auntie did not edit that poem and fix it over in the least because some things are better in the rough, aren't they? And this happened to be one of them. Auntie hopes that you all feel that way about your mothers. Auntie is lucky enough to have the best Ma on earth, too. How about the rest of you, members?

And now let's say 'bye, My, but we chatted a long time! 'Bye, everybody. Aunt Mia.
