SANTA ROSA MAN KILLED IN ACCIDENT

Falls Asleep Driving; Burns to Death After Crash

(Special to Japanese American News) SANTA ROSA, July 2.—Pinned beneath the flaming wreckage of his auto when it rolled off a high embankment by the highway about six miles from Petaluma, Kosuke Iwawaka, pioneer resident of Santa Rosa, was burned to death early this morning.

He is survived by a widow, five daughters, and three sons. The two eldest daughters are graduates of the local high school. The second daughter, Alice, is well known in San Francisco, where she is employed in the office of Dr. T. Hayashi, dentist.

Funeral plans have not yet been made.

Iwawaka had been in San Francisco on some business the previous day. Late Wednesday night, he had started for home, but before reaching the ferry, his auto had developed motor trouble. He is said to have stayed up all night fixing the car, and early in the morning continued his trip. About six miles this side of Petaluma, his car was seen to swerve crazily off the highway and over the embankment, according to a highway patrolman who was following him on his motorcycle. The man had evidently gone to sleep at the wheel after having been up all night. The car immediately burst into flames, and the man already burned to cinders when the motorcycle officers reached the spot.

The victim was 50 years old and had been a resident of Santa Rosa for more than 25 years. He was formerly the owner of the Market laundry of this city, which he sold about three years ago after having made it one of the most successful business enterprises operated by Japanese here. He was widely known and popular in American circles here as well as in the Japanese community.

JUNIOR AND SENIOR CLUB

"Lo, everybody! Come, family mine! It is still 6 in the morning as auntie types this on the portable on her knee. The poplar leaves are fluttering green and gray in the cool morning breeze. Come, let's chat before the sun blazes again and we all wilt in the heat."

What's this?—At big roll of something has come from our beloved Outcast way up in Auburn, family mine.—And what do you think it is? A story, dearst! A thrilling and exciting ghost story! Gather closer, dears while Outcast tells us the ghost tale.

THE LIGHT FROM THE ATTIC Chapter 1 To an outsider this group of boys would seem to be like any other group wending along various roads to Scout Camp. Two of them, John Ohara and Tom Renaudis, were what the other, Bert Elder, laughingly called "Boy Sprouts."

The town of Auburn knew them for a mischievous but honest bunch of boys. To be summed up in a few words, I quote Mrs. McCarthy's statement: "They are fine boys, no better made, but then sapleens, John and Tom, are going to get into real trouble some of these days."

Being full of vitality and energy they had to let steam off by playing usually harmless pranks and jokes. However, they were all loved by the people and admired by the small boys.

When they started out for the weenie roast in camp, the night was silver-mooned and white, the pines and firs had infinite numbers of slender silver daggers. The manzanita bushes stood white and motionless in the windless balmy night. Now a storm cloud had come up and darkened the sky so that they could only dimly see the old stage coach road winding among the hills.

That night they did not shout and laugh as they walked along. They were not afraid of anything but they felt strangely chilly and uncomfortable. They were not cold for the nights are balmy in Auburn. For reasons unfathomable to them, they talked in a subdued tone as they jogged along the needle cushioned road. The shadows of the oak and pine, very still and very dark, seemed to be waiting to spring upon them. An owl hooted from the nearby fir tree. The boys started over their heads, the storm kings, ever threatening, gathered their army for attack.

Suddenly, to the left of the boys appeared a clearing in which a magnificent three story stone mansion stood. The superstitious would not pass by it even in day time, it being said to be haunted by La Fere's ghost.

La Fere was a Frenchman, speaking broken English, who had suddenly come to Auburn. He was a rich man who had apparently come from the East. However, he did not speak much and withdrew from all contacts with his neighbors. He had his house built and lived in it with his body servant for nearly a year. Then an old miner named Mercer found him lying in a pool of caked blood, half of his face eaten by the coyotes. On the other half of his face there was an expression of horror the likeness of which no one had ever seen before.

"Thy boys were urging Bert to join the Scouts. "Bert, you'll be a keen patrol leader. Everybody says you would. And we three would have a lot of fun," pleaded Tommy. "Think of the camping trips!" "But don't we have fun?" asked Bert. "Besides, why do I have to be a bamboo sprout to—" "Don't but me, you stubborn sapleens!" ejaculated Tommy. "Why—" "Hey, guys," whispered Tommy, "there's a light in old La Fere's place!" "Where?" "Up in the attic!" "Scout law!" recited Joanne in a sing-song tone, "a scout must not tell lies."

However, even Joanne was awed as they saw a pale blue square of light on the third floor. "Let's go away," whispered Tommy. "Who's afraid?" asked John. "I dare you to go in," challenged Tommy. "I'll go, fraidy cat!" retorted Joanne. "I'll go with you, Johnny," said Bert. "It might be a tramp."

The house loomed high and grim. The storm kings hand was reaching out of the scudding clouds. The wind was moaning fitfully. A coyote further down the American river canyon yelped as in terror. The fir trees sh-sh-ed each other as if they knew a grim secret.

The boys walked swiftly to the veranda. John twisted the door knob and pushed. The door was locked. "What's that?" whispered John. They turned. A white robed thing came down the glade. As it drew closer the boys could see half of face, strangely lit up, the other side blank. The thing's hands were folded. The whole body was lit up; the garments had black dots on it. The boys gazed in horror. Then the ghost disappeared.

Simultaneously the door opened. They snapped on their search lights and silently filed in.

The room was spacious and gloomy and grim. The solid oak furniture stood sombre and stolid, impassive of time. The rain started to patter and then roared. In some part of the house a rat scurried.

The boys went into the other room, evidently a dining room. They began to be light hearted again although they still felt a sinister dread.

"Let's go see another room before we go away," ventured Tommy. "O. K. with me," replied Bert. They opened a heavy door which squeakingly protested. The golden circled of light lit up a chair, a table, and a mildewed volume on the table. —Then the boys jumped as if shot. Their lights disclosed a person slumped on the floor, his face a mask of terror, his neck torn open, his glassy eyes upturned.—Dead!

(To be continued tomorrow)

Ooooo! Isn't it a thrilling tale. Auntie is so glad that it is bright daylight by the riverside. Even at that she is feeling cold.

And now, bye, family mine. Let's go on with chapter 2 tomorrow. Aunt Mia.
