ANCIENT ASIA PRINT SHOW HELD IN N. Y.

Japan Printing Text Dated 770 A. D. Is Shown

NEW YORK, Dec. 10.—The oldest examples of printing are represented in a public exhibition at Columbia University, New York, arranged by the Department of Chinese in cooperation with the China Institute in America. Illustrating eleven centuries of printing development in China, the materials range from early wood block production of the Buddhists to modern typographical art.

A prayer charm from Japan, the earliest extant evidence of printing a text from wooden blocks on paper is shown. Owned by Thomas T. Hoopes of New York, it is one of a million printed in 770 A. D. under Empress Shotoku, a devout Buddhist who ordered each to be placed in a small wooden pagoda.

A photographic copy of a portion of the Diamond Sutra, the world's oldest dated book, printed in 868, now in the British museum, is displayed. There are two facsimiles of Buddhist wood cuts of the tenth century.

ASIA DISPUTE

Manchuria Free from Strife Due To Japan Rule

(The Consul General Kaname Wakasugi's address, which we are printing below, was delivered before members of the American Legion Sunday, Dec. 6, at Hotel Oakland.—The Editor.)

(Continued from Yesterday) "Manchuria is now the only part of China free from constant civil wars, although banditry is still in vogue even at present. It is generally recognized that the enormous increase of the Chinese population and the rapid development of natural resources in Manchuria are mainly due to the comparatively peaceful atmosphere under the influence of Japan's administration in the railway zone and the progress of communication by the efficient operation of the South Manchuria Railway.

"And now Japan has an investment of two billion yen in gold and a million of her subjects, including 800,000 Koreans, for whose protection the Japanese government feels especially responsible.

"From the foregoing descriptions you may realize how great an importance Japan attaches to her rights and interests in Manchuria, which are vital to her security and are interwoven into the complex fabric of her political and economic relations with China. That is why Japan is so sensitive to the Manchurian question and why she is so firmly determined to yield no dimension nor modification of her vested rights and interests.

"What Japan wants in Manchuria, therefore, is not territory, but only a candid recognition of the sanctity of her treaty rights and interests and also the full protection of Japanese lives and property there. In demanding these recognitions the Japanese people are convinced that Japan is asking only that which any other nation would have demanded under similar circumstances, and is asking the least for her national security which may be expected of any sovereign state."

Japanese communities of the Bay area responded with whole-hearted ardor to the call to give comfort and solace to the Japanese soldiers in the war zone of Manchuria. Seventeen thousand gift bags, packed into thirty-nine huge boxes, were assembled at the local Japanese Association, ready for shipment to the Japanese War office aboard the N. Y. K. motorship Tatsuta Maru, leaving this port on Thursday, December 10.

These gift bags were received from religious and social organizations, as well as from gakuena and young people's groups, all eager that the Japanese doughboys may find consolation in their while in the frozen plains of Manchuria, where the thermometer plunges below zero and blizzards are frequent.

The first batches were received from: 1. San Francisco Buddhist Ladies society, 15 boxes. 2. Nichiren Temple Ladies society, 5 boxes. 3. Taunt Temple, 5 boxes. 4. Kongo Temple, 3 boxes. 5. Kyowa gakuena, 1 box. 6. Kawashimo Japanese, 2 boxes. 7. Oakland Buddhist Temple, 2 boxes. 8. Berkeley Buddhist Temple, 2 boxes.

In addition, 9000 bags are prepared from Los Angeles, making the total for this first shipment to Japan some 26,000 bags.
